

The background of the entire page is a very blurry, low-resolution photograph. It appears to show a person wearing a bright green shirt, possibly a mechanic or a worker, who is leaning over and working on the side of a dark-colored vehicle. The image is out of focus, with the person's face and the vehicle's details being indistinct. The overall tone is somewhat industrial or military, given the context of the text.

Driving in Korea

Exciting and challenging!

There's an excellent network of primary and secondary roads with numerous roadside rest stops and picnic areas. There are lots of tourist hotels. But, there is also the concern of keeping a full gas tank.

Korean gas stations charge about $1.20 per liter so it is good to know the location of AAFES and U.S. military gas stations.

None of the AAFES and few of the military gas stations in Korea sell diesel for POVs. However, you may purchase diesel fuel at about $60 per liter at off-post Korean gas stations.

If your car breaks down on the expressway, the Korean police will help you by either providing minor parts or by calling a wrecker for you. In case of an accident, show your Status of Forces Agreement (SOFA) card to get help.

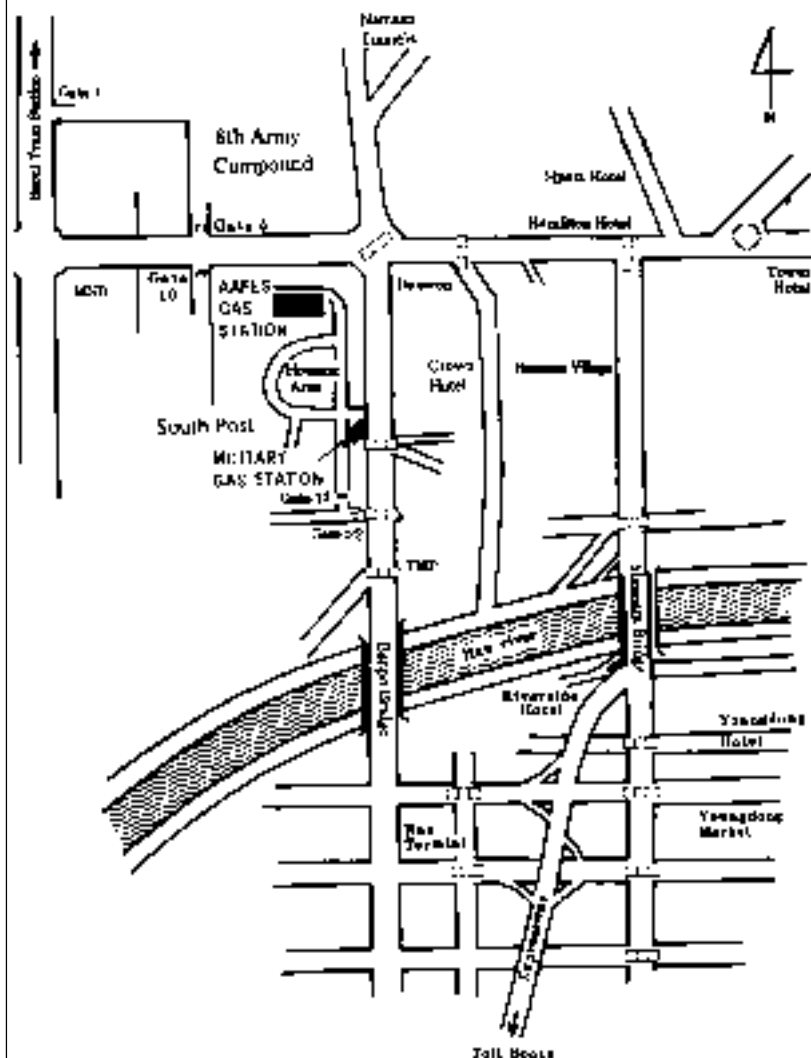

Roadside rest stops on expressways provide reasonably priced snacks and refreshments and Western-style facilities.

A Value Added Tax is levied (standard rate 10%) on most goods and services provided in hotels, tourist facilities and major restaurants. Tips are included in your bill as an additional ten percent service charge.

Carry extra won since most Korean stores, rest areas and gas stations don't accept U.S. dollars.

Make the first right upon entering the rotary and take the first left to enter the main gate.

TIPS FOR VEHICLE BREAKDOWN

When a vehicle becomes disabled on the expressway, move the vehicle to the right side of the roadway and place a triangular warning sign 100 meters or more behind the vehicle during the day.

At night, red flares or flashing lights may be used at least 200 meters behind the disabled vehicle to provide visibility within 500 meters from both directions.

Such warning devices must be carried at all times for use in an emergency. Otherwise Korean police will issue you a ticket for neglecting your responsibility of maintaining safety during a vehicle breakdown.

Eventually, either Korean police patrol cars or Korean Highway Corporation patrol trucks or cars will pass by. They will stop to assist if you wave at them or otherwise indicate that you need help. They have red emergency flashers on top of their vehicles.

Korean police officers recommend that you do not try to wave down other passing cars for help because it could be dangerous. Korean patrol officers usually speak some English, so try to speak slowly and clearly when addressing them. They can either take you to the nearest rest stop or tollgate to use the telephone, or they can contact their headquarters by radio to convey a message to the nearest American military police station.

The cost for Korean wrecker service depends on the distance from the highway to the Korean service station. Usually, it costs around 50,000 won within the city and up to 100,000 won from the expressway.
